How did the Fund perform during the reporting period?

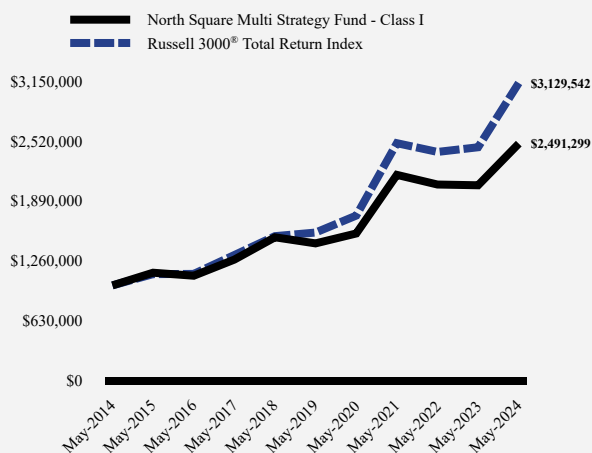

The Fund combines investments in growth and income strategies within a strategic allocation portfolio. The strategy seeks to bring together active and passive solutions into a thoughtfully diversified, actively managed portfolio that can help the portfolio adapt to the opportunities and challenges that develop across asset classes.

In the start of 2024, the S&P 500® achieved successive levels of all-time highs, exceeding initial expectations for the market. The performance of the individual companies has been mixed with a handful of companies acting as the primary driver for returns. Despite economic releases suggestive of a more resilient US economy, the pathway of future monetary policy remains the leading determinant for financial markets. Implications for elongated inflationary was challenged as the decline in the rate of inflation has plateaued and seeped across the various parts of the market. The previous year closed with broad anticipation of several rate cuts from the Federal Reserve only to see forecasts quickly shift in 2024. Renewed volatility within the Treasury market partially reversed late 2023 gains within the Bloomberg U.S. Aggregate Bond Index (-1.64% YTD) and the more rate sensitive small cap segment while thematic elements and growth equities appeared more favorable.

Despite the lack of breadth in the current rally, we are patient in our core-value equity allocation. In this uncertain economic environment, equity markets remain sensitive to further drawdowns that could sharply impact the stocks that have seen the strongest gains in recent months. Fixed income yields have become more compelling long run investments and have a greater potential to fulfill their risk mitigating role within the broader portfolio. If the economy avoids further setbacks, our equity allocation should benefit from a more broad-based recovery.
